The system adopted in connection with the Sanitary Board of confining the franchise to those whose names appear on the jury list sufficiently guards against any danger of a preponderance of Chinese being elected. Needless to say we approve of the Indian system in so far as it provides that the number of unofficial members should exceed the number of official members. The result in Iudia, we are told in the official report already alluded to, is that municipalities do more for the benefit of their citizens under the heads of water supply, hospitals and dispensaries, streets and roads, vaccination. drainage, sanitation, and education than was done before by Government officers. It is true complaint is made that the local bodies are slow in incurring expenditure and are seven days, and thence going to Singapore. At all the Indian ports the Commissioners set in. have been busy with improvements in the everywhere shows a remarkable increase. During the past seven years the value of the total foreign trade of Bombay has increased from 53 millions (taking) the "Rx." as a pound) to 65 millions; and Calcutta has increased from 57 millions to 68 millions. > "HANSARD" AND PARLIAMENTARY REPORTING.

In a memorandum just issued to the members of the House of Commons the editor of " Hansard's Parliamentary Dahates" describes the conditions under which the contract for the official reporting of the debates is now carried out, and surgests a considerable number of m diin existence for nearly rinoty years, and its volumes now reach the goodly number of 419. The arrangements between the Government and the contractors have undergone various changes since the year 1855, up to which time the work had been produced entirely at private expense. The existing contract includes reporting, printing, publishing, and sale; and the contractor may exercise his own discretion as to the long th of the reports, " provided that no speech be "reported at less than one-third of its length as "delivered," and that debates in Committee and on private Bills be reported with the same fulness as those on public questions. Mr. George Walpole, the editor, objects to several of these conditions, and calls the present system a failure. In the first place, he strongly protests against the policy of including in one contract two such dissimilar elements as professional reporting and the commercial business of printing. It is in fact impossible, he says, to carry out an arrangement of the kind without the adoption of some sort of farming or sub-letting a system which Houseof Commons. Then, as we have long known. there is great dissatisfaction on the part of thinks that no system of condensation could escape failure. He gives several illustrations of reasonable grounds for complaint; for example, a front-bench speaker may reply "elaborately "to an argument of Mr. X. That gentleman "will be exceedingly irate to find his own speech "out down to one-third, while a verbatim report "is given of the reply to it." On the other hand, we are reminded that, while it had happened several times this session that a member has been directed by the Speaker or Chairman to resume his seat on the ground that his speech was todious or irrelevant, "Hansard" by its condensation credits the speaker with an argument concise and to the point. Mr Walpole advocates "verbatim reports of the strict meaning of the word "verbatim," and plainly tells us that " there are few men in Parliament or anywhere else whose extempore "speeches would beer actual reproduction." He adopts a happy phrase of Mr. T. P. O'Coanor's,-"a rational verbatim report," which means that all grammatical errors, falseatarts, and so forth would be corrected, but that the report would be in other respects absolutely faithful. Another of his suggestions is that the speeches should all be reported in the first person, which it seems is in accord with the wishes of the majority. Mr. Walpole surprises us with the information
